

I am my associates conducted Faith Based Initiative seminar/workshops in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, South Carolina and North Carolina. After completing the test market tour, we came to the following decision; It appeared that there was a need for a Ecumenical Faith Based Initiative Association.

There were several reasons we arrived at this decision. The reasons were both positive and negative. I'll sight the positive ones first. They include but are not limited to the following; 1) Most of the church congregations that sponsored and/or attended these seminar/workshops were hungry for information about the mission, goals and objective of this new public policy initiative. 2) They were eager to have a permanent knowledgeable, faith based source they could call upon to direct them in grant writing, and other essentials need sponsor faith based initiative projects. And 3) results from the fact that apparently many of the established Christian denomination associates are reluctant to support the federal governments proposed faith based initiative for fear that the government will become too involved in -----that are strictly religious matters.
