Dear Bruce:

I know what you are thinking but you are wrong. When I learned of your heart attack I checked with my doctor, and he assured me that heart attacks are not contagious. On a more serious note.

When I last inquired about the state of your health, I was informed that you are out of intensive care and on the road to recovery. That was good news to say the least.

But more than that you should know that I am praying that you have a swift recovery and that you engage in a healthful life style and enjoy good health for the immediate and long term future as well.

Remember, we have some work to do. Together we are committed to creating and sustaining the nation's number one Center for Corporate Social Responsibility and Ethics. So take care, do what the doctors and health technician advise, and I'll look forward to seeing you soon.

Incidentally, I responded in the affirmative to Chancellor Ritchie's, letter extending an offer for me to serve as the director founder of the Center for Corporate Social Responsibility and Ethics. You should have your copy in hand shortly.

Sincerely

Arthur A. Fletcher
